

Title:

Duck On A Bike

Author:

David Shannon

Illustrator:

David Shannon

Summary:

This book is about a curious duck who finds a bike and goes on a ride. The duck rides by all his friends on the farm, who have different reactions to seeing him on the bike. In the end, all the animals on the farm find themselves a bike, and go on a ride with their friend duck.

Area of Use:

I can use this book to introduce the names of the different end punctuation marks, and when to use each type of end punctuation. In this book there are examples of each type of end punctuation, so I would be able to introduce each type of end punctuation with this book. While reading the story to my students, I would assign each student to be a different character in the book, have the students repeat their animals' reaction to seeing the duck, and have the students make the same facial expression as their assigned animal in the book. After reading the story, I would introduce the names of the different types of end punctuation, and when each type is used. I would bring in examples from the book to help my students make connections.

Review:

I really like this story for kindergarteners because it isn't only fun and engaging, but it can also be used to introduce a whole language arts topic. I believe that the connection between the story and the different types of end punctuation is not too hard for kindergarteners to make, which makes me really like this book.
